I hope you guys have been doing well. I have an article for your office's review. As always, I appreciate your consideration.

The bio will identify me as a former Treasury employee (amongst the other usual things such as (b) (6)), and will make clear that the article represents only my own personal views, and does not represent the views of any other institution. You will find, as always, that this is heavily footnoted and any relevant information is cited to a public source (from which I clearly draw all my data).

Thank you, and have a great week.

Kindest Regards,

(b) (6)

I hope you are well. I wanted to write to tell you that I am going to have to make some edits to the prior article I sent you several weeks ago, and that you may want to hold off doing anything further with it. The edits should not be too substantial (I will have to delete some sections that were not critical (introduction)), but I will put them in in track changes version and then send them back to you.

Thank you for your patience and assistance, and apologies for this. If you have reviewed this most of what you have done will still be relevant, but I just want you to know there might be some addition that I will send your way.

Gratefully,

(b) (6)

I apologize for the back and forth, but please stop reviewing the article. The editor and I have decided to go in a different direction. Your work will not be wasted, for I will use much of this in a piece I am writing for (b) (4) which I will send once appropriate.

Again, I apologize.

Best,

(b) (6)

I am attaching the slightly tweaked article. While sections have been moved around, the only actual additions are the 5 or 6 sentences I have highlighted in yellow. All are cited to public documents.

Thank you, again.

Pre-pub review - proposed blog comment

I wish to do a blog response to a statement in (b) (4). My comment follows immediately; (b) (4) paragraph follows second, for your reference. Because it's a blog response, timeliness is especially important. Thanks (b) (6)

No problem. The time frame is (b) (4). Thanks for the rapid response. Am I OK to blog with that added in?
